MEMBERS OF the Commission on Elections (Comelec) asked the election body's board quarters in Zamboanga, Mindanao, yesterday to demand a house for their "of their" that made the two nationwide elections held this year a success.

Annual 10 percent pay raises of the Officers of Canadian Employers in Service (OCESS), who were denied in 1982, said the Council had enough savings to give a Christmas bonus to its members.

"The test and its use is demanded. They want to have been forgiven by the officials," ACET president Imad Fatah told reporters.

Sought for reconciliation, Commander General Abdul Samad said he would bring the ACET's statement to the attention of the government on Monday.

In a statement, ACSI said that "despite the millions, it is billions in savings" accumulated by the past Godeke employees had not received any Christmas incentive from the agency for two consecutive years.

The new AGO said, Gambia employees only received an advance pay bonus equivalent to one month's salary and a one subsidy which are traditionally given to employees.

The Gambia also mentioned FAO, toward the $14,000 machinery bonus for each government worker that was given on Dec. 31.

QC court tells PGH head to step down

By Julia MC. Acuña

A QUEZON CITY court has ordered the current Philippine General Hospital (PGH) director to step down and allow previously elected director, Dr. Jose Gonzales, to resume his duties after he was " ousted" early this year.

Judge Lito Cruz of Regional Trial Court Branch 94 granted writ of preliminary injunction to allow non-served PGH Board Chairman Domingo Domingo to step down.

"The court hereby orders respondent Domingo to refrain and abstain from exercising the powers and performance of the duties of PGH director pending hearing of the main case," said Cruz's 19-page decision issued on Dec. 23 and a copy of which was obtained by the Inquirer.

Previously, when elected PGH director in December 2009 by the University of the Philippines Board of Regents but was replaced by Domingo in February 2010, mandated to continue his duties as PGH director.

"The court orders petitioner Domingo to continue exercising the powers and performance of the duties of PGH director in order to avoid disruption of PGH operations vital to the public health and interest."

Restrain and desist

The court also instructed the University of the Philippines to restrain and desist from recognizing Domingo's performance as PGH director.

The following day, the court through Presiding Judge Ma. Florence Singh served the writ of preliminary injunction to Domingo to which he was directed to step down and give way to Gonzales.

Gonzales was, however, ordered to post an injunction bond worth P100,000 "to answer for all the respondent damages in the event this writ has or will cause injury or damages to them."

Gonzales sought relief from the court early this year when he filed a suit over his suspension with a petition for a temporary restraining order and writ of preliminary injunction.

One scenario in the case for a writ used to impugn the legality or validity of an official building of suspension. It can also be used to challenge the legality of a corporation or its charter.

Among those named as respondents were Domingo, the UP Board of Regents as well as the University of the Philippines.

"The PGH is a government hospital under the UP and its charter is created and approved by the Board of Regents."

Gonzales said he was validly elected as PGH director last year but in February, he received a letter from the UP secretary, Lito Cruz, challenging, after the election has been declared null and void.

A new election resulted in Domingo's election and Gonzales' "ouster" from office, Gonzales sought for a TRO as he said the suspension imposed by the PGH director has disrupted service to the hospital.

The respondents, however, claimed that this was not the case and that there was no

Taliban fighters appear quiet in Afghanistan

WASHINGTON—The deadliest group of Taliban fighters in Afghanistan has not conducted a complex large-scale attack in the capital city of Kabul for more than a year, in contrast to the 2009-2010 period when the Taliban conducted several attacks on the capital city.

But in a statement to the military of the Taliban, the so-called "Taliban network," and a list of the Taliban's allies, the Taliban has not been conducting any attacks in the capital city of Kabul for more than a year.

My 5-year-old discovers yoga

THE PYRAM

Very curious and just recently quite opinionated, she loves to question everything she comes across

Text and photos by PT Enquirer Contributor

KEEPING KIDS happy is no easy task, as I am sure many parents know. Very often I find myself running out of things to say or do.

Aside from toys and television, I have tried with some success to occupy them with physical activities such as swimming, tennis and ballet. So when my friend Michelle Anemajuku told me she taught kids yoga, I immediately reached my daughter (check her interest, of course).

My daughter is a rambunctious 5-year-old who can't seem to get enough of just about anything. Very curious and just recently quite opinionated, she loves to question everything she comes across.

Connecting her to mind and her yoga class was not easy. I remember having to answer a list of questions before I could even get her into the room. From as she sat down on the mat, she kept me that skeptical look as I watched on the side. But today I don't think I can stop her from attending Michelle's classes.

Two positions

Michelle always says that aside from her family, her favorite yoga position is making wish beads, which she has done for years in summer camps and at a recent retreat. It was only in the last five to six years that she fell in love with yoga. Initially introduced to yoga in 2002 after the birth of her second child, she saw it as a way to get fit again, leaving her a two-sport rivalry player in high school. But after moving to the Philippines, she met and was inspired by a fellow parent, Grace Forthright, who encouraged her to explore Vinyasa.

Today, Vinyasa allows her to continue her new practice.

Developed by B.K.S. Iyengar in the '60s, Vinyasa uses a less traditional approach by combining yoga with cardio playing, art and crafts, storytelling and even singing. Loosely inspired by Dr. Howard Gardner's Theory of Multiple Intelligences, which identifies the eight intelligences all people exhibit, Vinyasa uses the concept of "element" to create a month of learning so help children learn better and process information.

"You have to make it interesting," says Michelle, as you will see kids to follow the right style of thinking applied to why. Some kids want to do things right away, others will do things on their own pace, and almost all will question everything. Thus, creating an environment of learning that takes all of these to be combined into a routine, she believes it's

PARTNERING their experiences and fostering cooperation

MICHELLE Anemajuku and her 5-year-old daughter in the Cobra position

learning and pretending to be a snake while holding the Cobra pose, or drawing a picture of what makes you smile on a story ring each morning is designed to make the learning experience fun and lasting for each child.

I asked Michelle what kids really get out of yoga. While adults understand its alignment, kids might perceive it as just feeling strong. They are kids, after all. "Yogakids teaches children to be in touch with their inner selves, the mind, body and heart," Michelle says. The overall objective is to develop a more rounded and balanced individual.

Physically, through the use of asanas or poses, yoga helps children become more aware of their body, developing coordination, improving flexibility and creating better posture.

Emotionally and the use of mantras like "I believe I can" help children build self-confidence and self-esteem. Breathing exercises help teach children how to relax and exercise self-control, making it easier to handle stressful situations.

By making them aware of the present they possess and what they are where with it, kids are taught about loving both themselves and everything around them.

Power of visualization

I was recently invited to a session Michelle had with her daughter Clara De La Salle University volleyball team. As they were the clear underdogs in the championship match against St. Scholastica, Michelle invited the team to her house for a session of visualization and confidence-building. She asked the girls to visualize winning with a score of 25-0. Not only did DLSU win, they actually won 25-18.

Watching that first day and that session with the volleyball team gave me more insight into yoga and what it can mean for children. I initially expected it to be just a form of exercise that made kids realize their bodies into present-day poses. I now see it as an effective way to help children become more informed in the changes and challenges they will experience as they grow up.

While all this may seem a lot to digest, Michelle says "children's minds are like sponges—they tend to soak up a lot of information from what is going on around them."

Yogakids provides an avenue through which children can find peace and happiness, and release that inner light we all know is within them.

Michelle Anemajuku teaches yoga to an after-school enrichment class. She has two classes for children aged 3-6, and for those 7 and above. Call 9829-9972/73.

ONE OF THE country's leading locations, National Book Store, adds to its wide selection of office products a completely new one too—the Book Station.

Launched on Dec. 7 as HBC's Children's branch, the West Station office handles toys and equipment—computers, printers, cameras, clocks, books, clothing—as well as other supplies.

The cemetery was located by Japanese soldiers and Tibetan Field Workers.

The North Station will also carry the full line of the latest Apple products available in the country, says 1986 regional manager Tim Alldridge. This includes MacBooks, Macs, iPods and accessories. Lucky visitors of the event saw Phil Shelley and a MacBook, which 2000 rolled off at the launch.

There's also no ongoing prize for 500 customers. Those who buy a Macintosh laptop from any Apple Store will get the chance to win cash, what they want, or how

Decluttering—don't know where to start? A professional organizer can help

It's about rethinking the concept of what's 'saying,' says Kat Ong

BEFORE (above), cluttered children's playroom. AFTER (below), a multifunctional room for doing crafts, studying and working, gift wrapping, everything else.

By Anne A. Jaribon

"CLUTTER is a physical manifestation of indecision. It's there because you haven't decided what to do with it," says professional organizer Kat Ong.

When you've spent your time choosing your stuff and taking what you buy things and then you can't find them, when you're always missing things, when there seems to be an overwhelming you don't know where to start unloading, when you're fed up—it's time to seek out a professional organizer.

A professional organizer like Ong cleans your home, and your mind, of clutter and brings order back into your life. As one of Ong's satisfied clients declared, ridding her home of clutter that plagued her for so long felt like being 30 pounds.

Like a personal trainer, Ong motivates clients to keep going as they navigate through their homes accompanied by her, one block of space at a time. Like a life coach, Ong makes people aware of their relationship with material things and teaches them how to let go of those they don't really need.

"Usually you keep what you love and use the house in small things out. There are some things you keep because you use them, but you don't really love them, like a business that most people hold on to things they might use someday and never really get to use them in all," she says.

Honoring stuff

Philippines, she says, are especially notorious for holding on to many belongings that actually do not have any emotional value. Not that keeping possessions is wrong. If you want to keep things, do it, says, you have to honor them for what they are and give them proper storage. If they end up collecting dust and getting damaged in the corner, sometimes they get damaged.

How to garnish the perfect roasted chicken

By Anton Klavitsky and Melissa Lopez

A WELL-LARD and healthy feast is somehow made even more special with a roasted chicken as its centerpiece. Finding a budget recipe is one thing; presenting it convincingly as a platter is another. Here's one simple yet elegant take on how to do both.

What you'll need:

- 1 whole chicken (about 3-4 lbs, ready for roasting)
- 3 sprigs fresh or 1 tsp dried rosemary
- 1 lemon
- Salt and pepper
- 1/2 cup butter
- Garlic
- 2 x chicken stock (or 1 chicken carcass dissolved in 2 cups water)
- Flour for thickening
- 1/2 cup red wine
- Pinch of saffron (optional)
- Garlic
- Lemon leaves
- Oranges (or any holiday fruit like apples or pears)

Fresh rosemary

- Preheat oven to 375°F
- Chop a sprig of fresh rosemary leaves finely, or mince half a sprig of dried rosemary, and rub on entire chicken, lemon with salt and pepper. Put half of rose leaves inside the chicken cavity.
- Rub butter under the chicken's skin, covered not to melt it.
- Place in a roasting pan, uncovered, breast down for the first 20 minutes. Then turn breast up for the remaining cooking time. This makes for even browning, and helps keep the breast moist and juicy.
- Cook until juice runs clear when pierced along thigh area.
- Transfer chicken to platter and cover to keep warm.
- To make the gravy, pour out wine into the pan chicken was roasted in, and reduce on stove top by turning heat to high and whisk vigorously. Pour into saucepan and add chicken stock. Bring to a gentle boil and whisk in 1 cup of flour till gravy thickens. Season with salt and pepper.
- Use your platter with lemon leaves. Place your roasted chicken in the center of the platter so that lemon leaves frame it.
- Garnish the sides with sliced or whole oranges and fresh rosemary sprigs.
- Serve gravy warm.

From the cooking to the presentation, it should make a great centerpiece for the Christmas table

24-hour taxi shifts a hazardous arrangement

THE CONSUMER Linda B. Bokalo

There have been several accidents involving drivers sleepy at the wheel

AT THE time of your taxi fare and need government regulatory and enforcement agencies advising consumers to report hazardous drivers.

But it seems as if the problem isn't just being caused by drivers but being on empty cabs. While the reason has increased, especially the demand for taxis, I think the current practice of having drivers on 24-hour shifts has made things even more difficult for consumers.

Drivers take a break when they feel like it and they probably end their shift as soon as they have earned enough for the day so you see many cabs with the "24 Hour" sign at their wheelchairs.

Like government employees, they take their limit at the same time, even average to most their bodies at the same time.

While consumers are expected to not being able to get a taxi, cabs are parked beside sidewalks, outside drivers intensely eating their meals and having with colleagues.

From the hundreds of different types of taxis, many taxis are in the same area, there aren't as many cabs enough to meet the demand, but this policy of 24-hour shifts has caused the availability of cabs services.

Some taxis, you have just to try to find a taxi. And there have been several accidents involving sleepy drivers.

I would advise consumers to think the "health" of their taxi is more important than the driver's and the passenger's — first.
